$5000000000000-00000000000000000 A Paris dentist, Drossner, has discovered that while his patients succumb to the influence of an anesthetic, he has noticed that the hallucinations were invariably connected with the sounds from the street below. The auditory sensations seem intimately connected with the anesthetic sleep, and the idea occurred to him to subtitute for the discordant, terrifying sounds of the street harmonious musical sounds. He arranged a graphophone with a receiver for each ear. As the patient took his seat, the receivers were placed in his ears, and the nitrogen gas administered. He could hear nothing but the music. The operation over, the patient is aroused with none of the hallucinations from the street noises, but calm and cheerful as before, saying that be heard nothing but the music.

This ingenious device is certainly a definite advance on the part of the anesthetist. Not only can it be used in the case of the temporary anesthesia of features about taking of an anesthetic patient. These can all be avoided by using a graphophone. It was pointed out to the Academy of Medicine of Paris graphophone, and then the anesthestic state kept up with ether or chloroform much from the auditory hallumnations
